WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Dry and mild conditions will persist for the next several days with some cooling through midweek as a strong ridge of high pressure gradually shifts east. It will be clear in most areas but clouds will return to the coast tonight.

San Francisco Weather:

A gradual cooling trend is forecast across the district through Thursday as the upper level ridge of high pressure that has been over California weakens and shifts inland. However, towards the end of the week another strong upper level ridge is projected to build into the forecast area from the west and will result in warmer and drier conditions for the upcoming weekend.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

Interior northern California will have dry and warm weather through at least the next week under strong high pressure.

Hanford Weather:

High pressure will provide for mostly clear skies through the early portion of the week with above average temperatures. A slight cooling trend is expected by midweek as the high weakens.

WEATHER

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

The high will weaken early this week and onshore flow will increase to develop the marine layer and return the temperatures to normal at the beaches first, then inland by Thursday. Hurricane Simon will bring additional clouds to the area by midweek. Another high should move in at the end of the week for a warming trend.

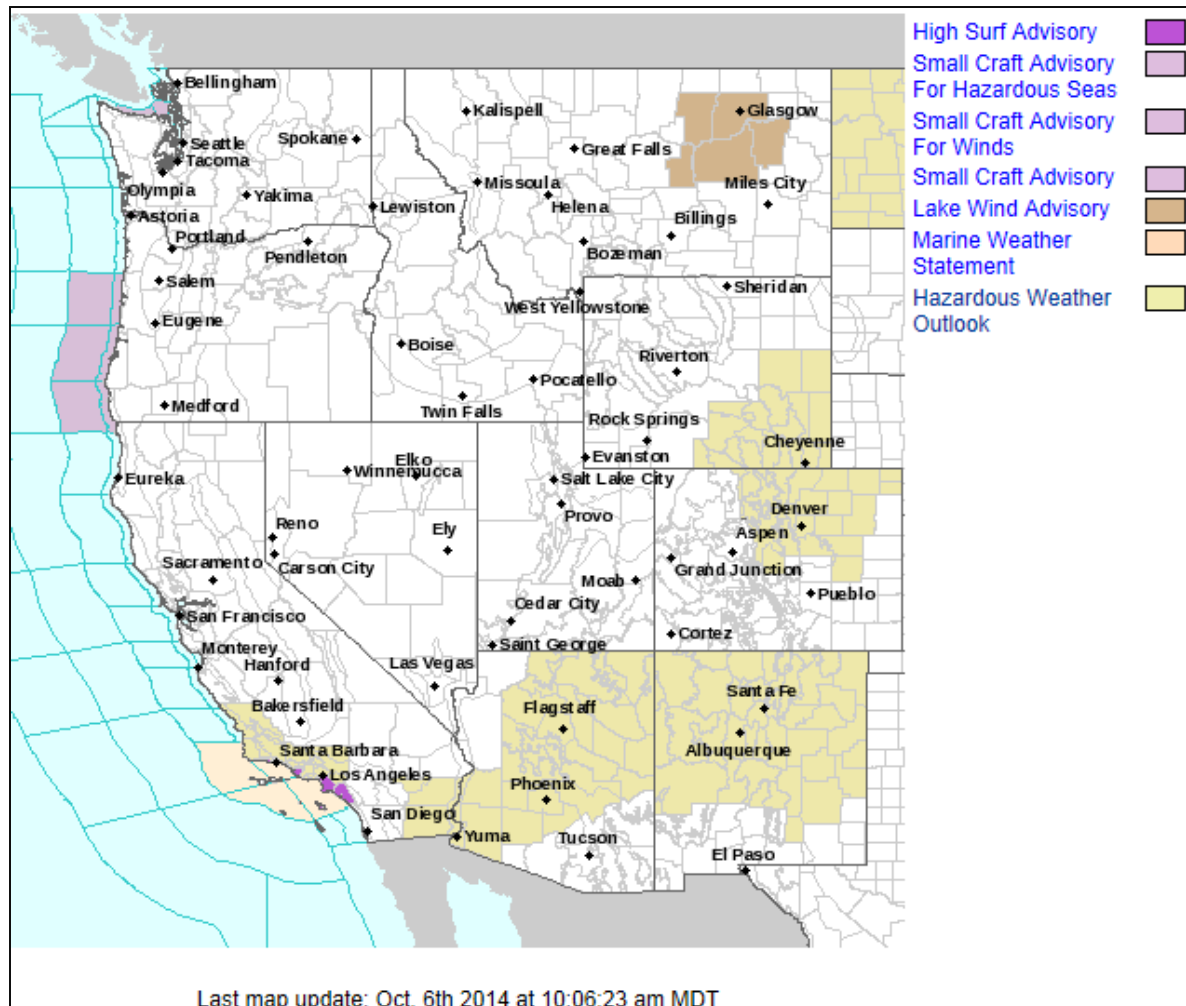

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Weak onshore flow will bring a slow cooling trend for the first half of the week with patchy night and morning low clouds and fog near the coast. Moisture from the remnants of former Hurricane Simon may graze far southern areas Tuesday, mainly San Diego County southward and eastward bringing a slight chance of showers and thunderstorms Tuesday. For late in the week and early next week, high pressure aloft off the California coast and surface high pressure over the Great Basin will bring a warming and drying trend.

Southeast California Weather:

High pressure will continue to provide dry weather with above normal temperatures today. During the latter half of the week, moisture will gradually decrease with mostly sunny skies returning to the region.
